Ethan Bueno de Mesquita

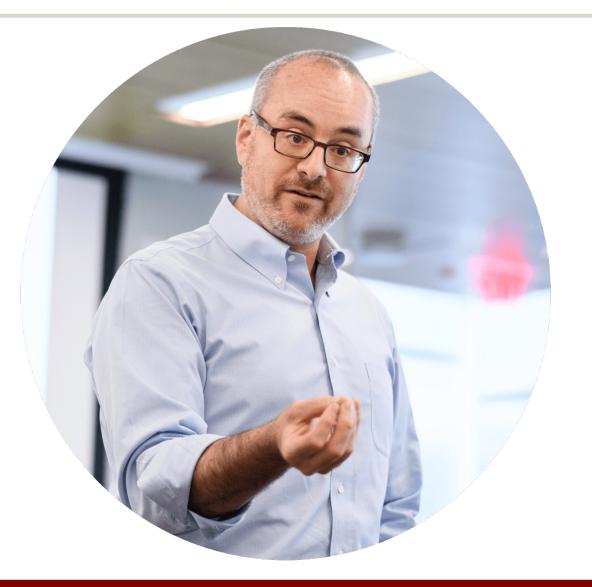

Dean and Sydney Stein Professor at the University of Chicago Harris School of Public Policy A leading political scientist whose research applies game theoretic models to the study of conflict, political violence, national security, and electoral politics, Ethan has also written extensively on methodological issues in the social sciences. He writes and advises leaders in the public and private sectors on both national security matters and issues at the intersection of technology and society.

Increase your impact

The most wonderful thing about Harris is that while the end goal is to get back to the world and make things different, it is an incredible opportunity to take a breath and immerse yourself in a life of intellectual matters. Here, you can dig in and explore ideas seriously, invest in yourself, and embrace the luxury of being exposed to new thoughts and new ideas.

#WhyPublicPolicy

"The resources at Harris—academic and personal—are one of the strongest assets Harris has. For example, there are networking opportunities every week, which is very different from South Korean graduate school. There, we had fewer social events and opportunities for people to engage with each other, which is why I am trying to be active in this area and take advantage of the benefits I have here as a student."
